Guideline for Major Courses
Offered for Critical Connections Credit

In general, courses which are requirements in a major are not considered well suited for the critical connections list since:

1) those required courses are intended for majors rather than for general education purposes, especially when they are imagined for juniors and seniors;

2) such a course would violate the principle of breadth which underlies the general education program, because it would effectively discourage those majors from taking a critical connections course outside the requirements of the major; and

3) non-majors may be at a real or perceived disadvantage in a course which serves the goals of a major.
