

ACCOUNTING

Manchester's accounting program is legendary for producing graduates who are more solidly prepared than most. Students work hard, but it's worth it. Most accept full-time positions months before they even graduate! And, in 2007, the average starting salary reported by accounting graduates was $44,333.

side by side

- David Brown '07 teamed up with three other seniors and, along with their advisor, researched, wrote, and presented a paper at the Indiana CPA Society Case Study Competition. Manchester's team beat several large universities and finished third in the state.
- Volunteering in the community is important for accounting students too. Tiffany Portz '07 assisted at a nearby wildlife rehabilitation center; Norma Rojas '07 taught English as a second language to Latino members in the community.

academics that matter

The best advice for a student who wants to become a certified public account is to take college prep classes in high school. There's no need to take accounting until you get here. Once you are at Manchester, you'll learn what it takes to succeed and how to balance your studies with fun times too.

SUCCESS

- Tai Cerney '07 spent her last semester in Cheltenham, England, knowing she already had a job lined up as a staff audit accountant with Ernst and Young in Fort Wayne.
- Accounting students find that the critical thinking, ethical decision making, and stick-to-it skills they learn at Manchester are good for law school too. Ashley Davis '07 interned with Biomet's legal department in Warsaw, Ind., before heading to DePaul University College of Law in Chicago to study corporate law.

for my friends and help them through whatever. I was fortunate in that, at Manchester, I was able to play basketball, make some really great friends, do well in academics and my internships... and I still accepted a job offer eight months before I graduated.

The biggest thing I found at Manchester is friendship, not only with my peers but also my professors. One professor just sent me an e-mail congratulating me for my accomplishments and telling me he was proud of me. I just feel like you are always going to have work to do, you are always going to have something on your plate. I would rather be there
