Ilive, relive, observe and analyze. My imagery originates from impressions of my own childhood home, but has taken on a form of nostalgic remembrance in other domestic spaces. The life lived, and the people who came and went appear as energies within my described and deconstructed spaces. Each image is a capsule of compressed time, enhanced with imagination. I juggle the sensation of absence and presence, often leaving plot out of the story.

The vital space of a home, whether my own, that of a loved one, or even a transient stranger exudes a concrete essence that I strive to capture in my imagery. As both an observer and outsider, I allow daydreams and recollections to narrate voyeuristic glimpses into real foreign spaces that strangers call home. The spontaneity of this superficial invasion is a forbiddingly thrilling glimpse into another's world.
