As always, this time of year is absolutely beautiful on the Manchester College campus. The grass is a rich green again. The redwoods are in bloom. The squirrels are darting about. And most important, graduation has happened again! Celebrating seniors' completion of their studies, both in and outside of class, is an important date in the year's cycle of this campus.

This issue of Manchester Magazine reflects other important times in the cycle of life at Manchester College:

- Retirements of some amazing faculty members who have taught here a total of 155 years Jim Adams, Scott Strode, Lana Groombridge, Ingrid Rogers and Chuck Stanton
- Celebration of students' academic research at the 2008 Student Scholarship Symposium
- Commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King's historic visit to our campus 40 years ago

As I meet more and more alumni of Manchester College, I am struck by the variety of people who have studied here. We are an academic community that embraces differences, and we are the better for it. We are conservatives, liberals, active in churches, skeptics, artists, athletes, glass-half-empty folks and glass-half-full folks, readers, doers, followers, leaders, teachers, students, self-disciplined, wealthy, detail-oriented and big-picture in perspective. We are old and young; black, white and shades in between; healthy and not-so-healthy.

But we are all curious to learn. We are people who ask questions. We have great memories from classes and antics at Manchester College.

This magazine captures some of that diversity. We hope you enjoy being a part of such a richly-varied alumni group, and we hope you enjoy this magazine!

Iumni and friends joined President Jo Young Switzer and Dave Switzer for a 10-day tour of Italy in March, Taking in the sights, sounds and tastes of Venice, Florence, Rome, Pompeii, Pisa and the Amalfi coast. The Switzers, who have traveled and attended cooking school in Italy, enjoyed the opportunity to make new friends.

Among the highlights for the Switzers:

- The gondola ride with music in the canals of Venice
- Seeing Michelangelo's David in Florence
- The funicular ride to get to the quaint shops and ceramics in Orvieto on top of the cliffs
- The view of the Bay of Naples from our beautiful hotel in Sorrento
- The bright sunny day in Pompeii, with Vescuvius looming nearby
- The enormity of St. Peter's Square in Rome on the day before Palm Sunday
- The laughter and stories at dinner each evening and the shopping adventures each day

MANCHESTER COLLEGE MOCK STUDENT CORPORATION PUTS ITS PROFITS TOWARD REVIVAL OF THE FIREHOUSE

A Manchester College business class has set its students on the path of corporate philanthropy even before they enter the real business world. On May 14, in the middle of finals, students in BUS-474 Case Studies in Business suited up to present the profits of their mock corporation to a local youth hangout very much in need.

CHET Outfitters presented a check for more than $1,600 to The Firehouse, a free music venue for area youth that has hosted indie rock bands and local garage bands. Last July, the roof of the former fire station collapsed under heavy rains. The structure was destroyed, the music silenced. Community volunteers are giving their backs and money to the rebuilding.

Firehouse continued

"We chose The Firehouse because it is a great community resource in need," said Ellie Davis '08, president of CHET Outfitters, whose "employees" sold T-shirts, mugs, fleece blankets and shorts.

It's a tradition: Students in Professor Tim Ogden's '87 class annually create a complete corporation with product, marketing, human resources, accounting and volunteer divisions.

"You are now a part of The Firehouse," Jabin Burnworth, one of The Firehouse creators, told the Case Studies students. "This will help," said Burnworth, who noted, "When the roof collapsed last summer, it was a horrible situation. We thought, "This is it, this is all over.' "

CHET Outfitters philanthropy extended to 544 hours assisting at retirement homes, schools, churches, animal shelters and campus events, said senior Jaci Simmons '08, who managed the Volunteer Services Division.

MANCHESTER AWARDS RECORD $9.9 MILLION IN ACADEMIC SCHOLARSHIPS TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS

Manchester College is awarding more than $9.9 million in academic scholarships for the 2008-09 school year, including 198 to highperforming high school seniors. The total scholarship amount sets an enormous record for the College.

"Interest in Manchester has been extraordinary this year," said David F. McFadden '82, executive vice president. "Applications are up more than 50 percent and nearly twice as many students participated in our academic scholarship interviews." The College also awards financial need aid.

All of the scholarships recognize academic achievement, and range from $44,000 to more than $80,000 over four years.

VISITORS TRAVEL THE WORLD AT THE INTERNATIONAL FAIR

Visitors got a genuine taste of the world at the 2008 International Fair on April 13. They stepped into a swirl of music and chatter, dancing and tempting scents of foods of many cultures.

Students and professionals performed dancing and drumming, with activities for children, exhibits and food. Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, Cambodia, Palestine, Uzbekistan, China, India, Jamaica, the Philippines, France, Mexico and other countries were represented.

Farida Adam '08, a political science major born in Cambodia, helped cook. "It's a chance for Manchester College's international students to give the College and our community insight and a taste of somewhere across the oceans that they may have never ever even thought about!"

Manchester College students and faculty represent more than 24 countries. "This bi-annual International Fair supports the mission and values of Manchester College of celebrating diversity," said Jacquilline Nagila, director of multicultural services and campus diversity.

"Our hope is that the event will catalyze conversations that surround cultural differences, and the appreciation and recognition of these differences as unifying agents."

STUDENTS USE SPRING BREAK TO BUILD HOUSES FOR KENTUCKY FAMILIES

A team of volunteers traveled to Kentucky to help build homes for low-income families when the College's Habitat for Humanity chapter took its 21st spring break. The team of seven students and a faculty and staff member stayed in Lexington March 15-20.

The project included roofing and other construction. Manchester's students represented a range of majors, from education to business, exercise science, Spanish and social work.

"I always look forward to this," said Brad Yoder, professor of sociology and social work and faculty advisor for the Manchester chapter of Habitat for Humanity. "It's so exciting to work with families and hear from them how big a difference it's going to make in their lives to have a home."

The Manchester chapter raised money for the Kentucky travel and building expenses by raking leaves and with its annual Shack-a-thon, spending a night in a makeshift cardboard shelter on the mall.

COLLEGE TAPS THREE STUDENTS FOR OUTSTANDING LEADERSHIP

Manchester has honored three students for making "a world of difference" with their outstanding leadership in campus organizations and projects, in service and in residential life.

- Tim Polakowski '08 of Rockton, Ill., received the Capstone Outstanding Senior Leadership Award
- Katie McCann '08 of Homewood, Ill., and Carole Fike '10 of Pearl City, Ill., share the Outstanding Student Leader of the Year Award

Polakowski's campus leadership ranged from resident assistant to the Manchester Activities Council and the Social Services Council. With Professor Ingrid Rogers, last summer he published a Resource Guide for area Spanishspeaking residents. He also provided tutoring in English as a second language and translating in the community.

McCann was the new-student orientation assistant, student sctivities assistant and worked to build an organization for those interested in history, her major. She was a member of Chamber Singers and A Cappella Choir, and helped raise funds for the choir's performance at Carnegie Hall last spring.

Fike's campus activities range from campus ministry to student government and the award-winning chapter of the Student Education Association. Her first-hand knowledge of the diversity of campus involvement makes her the ideal student ambassador for prospective students and their families. Her passions include Symphonic Band, hand bell choir, Indiana Reading Corps, and as campus student coordinator for the Brethren Heritage Tour celebrating the denomination's 300th anniversary.

PAINTINGS OF PROFESSOR JIM ADAMS FILL GALLERY G FOR TWO-PART SHOW

The artistry of Professor James R.C. Adams is making exciting use of the College's glassed showcase Gallery G, on the upper level of the College Union. The show opened in early May with Adams' portrait and life drawings. Now showing until Aug. 15 is a lifespan of his vibrant and captivating paintings.

The paintings interpret Adams' vision of the world, boldly displaying his discoveries of color, shape and shadow. They include a 1972 portrait of his mother, a 1954 painting while he was a student at the Ruskin School of Art at Oxford University, and more recent scenes of Morocco, Venice and Mexico. His collection is large. "The earliest paintings that I still have go back some 70 years," notes Adams.

"I discovered that I had two different approaches that alternated over many years," says Adams of the diversity of his portfolio. "... students should learn to paint what they see before they try to paint what they feel," Adams says. "That is the way the great 'modern masters' worked. Picasso, Braque, Mondrain, Matisse, all could paint accurately. They eventually chose not to."

Adams' drawings were on display earlier in May. He drew all of the portraits and some of the figures in his classroom as demonstrations, each taking 15 minutes to a half-hour to complete. "Drawing is the foundation for all art, and figure-drawing is the most important sort of drawing," says Adams. "The human body is an amazing creation, and if you can learn to draw it well, you can draw anything."

SOPHOMORE IS "OUTSTANDING" AT MOCK TRIAL TOURNAMENT

Tihitina Dagnew '10 of Ethiopia was honored as an "Outstanding Attorney" in the Feb. 23-24 South Bend regional mock trial competition. The Manchester College team competed against 23 other teams from 14 schools.

Three other members of her team also received high scores, just missing distinction: Jackie Dobbert '10 biology major from Greentown, Ind.; Holly DeNeve '08, political science major from New Carlisle, Ind.; and Tarran Day '08, psychology major from Tipton, Ind.

"Mock trial promotes critical thinking in the trial preparation phase, provides 'on your feet' experience, and allows for constructive criticism, all of which is invaluable to future lawyers," said D. Randall Brown '87, partner at Barnes & Thornburg LLP, Fort Wayne.

FUTURE PHYSICAL EDUCATION TEACHER DEGRANDCHAMP RECEIVES TOP NATIONAL STUDENT HONOR

Melanie DeGrandchamp '09 of Fort Wayne received the highest student honor of the American Alliance for Health Physical Education, Recreation, and Dance at its national convention in April.

DeGrandchamp is 2008 Undergraduate Adapted Physical Education Student of the Year. DeGrandchamp is the first Hoosier to receive the prestigious award in 10 years.

In addition, the Alliance (AAHPERD) also awarded her its $1,000 Ruth Abernathy Presidential Scholarship for her "fine academic performance and extra-curricular accomplishments."

DeGrandchamp, whose name appears consistently on the Dean's List, plans to teach students with disabilities. She was 2007 Outstanding Student of the Indiana partner of AAHPERD and a Manchester College 2007 Outstanding Student Leader, with a habit of leadership in the Sports, Health and Physical Education Club (SHAPE); Student Education Association; intramurals and the state Council of Future Professionals. DeGrandchamp also volunteers with several organizations that assist persons with disabilities.

Top symposium scholars focus research on the galaxy and war crimes in Iraq

Cheers and applause exploded through the standingroom-only crowd on the afternoon of April 4th ... not for a victorious 3-pointer, but for two research scholars who had just netted The Jo Young Switzer Award for Excellence.

A future peacemaker and scientist each received the $150 top prize in the largest field of competition in the history of the 10-year-old Student Research Symposium, formerly called the Dean's Symposium:

- Georgi Chunev '08 of Bulgaria, who joined faculty mentor Dr. Christer Watson in scrutinizing 3-D infrared data delivered by NASA's $733 million orbiting Spitzer Space Telescope
- Sarah Hall '08 of Roaring Spring, Pa., who explored the possibility of Germany prosecuting former U.S. Secretary of Defense for alleged war crimes and torture during the war in Iraq

The research by the 35 student presenters reflected the breadth of side-by-side study opportunities with faculty.

"Some of the work that you all heard today was graduate level, and I am so happy that Manchester College provides this opportunity for undergraduates to gain some experience at working on projects deeper than typical," Dean Glenn Sharfman, vice president for academic affairs, told the crowd.

"I want to congratulate all of you students for doing something when you did not have to, for educating all of us on your area of expertise, and for taking advantage of this opportunity to know your faculty mentor better."

In her presentation, Hall, a peace studies major, analyzed the likelihood of a trial of former U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsford under universal jurisdiction. She considered crimes, diplomatic and state immunity, and the role of universal jurisdiction in German legal code. Her mentor was Dr. Tim McElwee '78, Plowshares associate professor of peace studies.

Chunev, a computer science and mathematics major, had the extraordinary opportunity to work with Dr. Watson, assistant professor of physics, participating in a $736,000 research grant shared by other scientists. Chunev and his teacher analyzed computer data of debris that the orbiting telescope sent to Earth, seeking clues to the evolution of extrasolar terrestrial planets.

"The way he spoke just inspired me to be a better person. He lifted all of us up; he said we're all capable of more." — President Jo Young '60 Switzer

Commemorating Martin Luther King Jr.'s speech to Manchester College exactly 40 years ago Feb. 1

The great civil rights leader is gone, as is the gymnasium where he delivered his last campus address before his assassination 40 years ago. But the memories of that emotion-charged moment at Manchester College linger steadfastly.

M

On Friday, Feb. 1 – exactly 40 years since King delivered his address "The Future of Integration," the Manchester College community filled Cordier Auditorium to commemorate the event with reflections, carefully preserved video and song.

The Feb. 1, 1968 event was years in the making, accomplished through the perseverance of then-President Blair Helman, despite protests and threats from some members of the community. King's magnificent cadence resonated in a gymnasium filled with a rapt crowd. Afterward, he lunched with a select few – including the then-editor of the Oak Leaves, current President Jo Young '69 Switzer.

"The way he spoke just inspired me to be a better person. He lifted all of us up; he said we're all capable of more," recalled Switzer, who this Feb. 1 shared the same podium and microphone. "He spoke for a very long time, yet he was so mesmerizing, it seemed to go by in a second."

Remembered

For the commemoration, students read select portions of King's April 16, 1963 Letter from Birmingham Jail. Also on the program were reflections by Professor Emeritus Kenneth L. Brown, recipient of the Fellowship of Reconciliation's Martin Luther King Jr. Award, and music by the A Cappella Choir.

"This commemoration honors Dr. King's speech – but even more importantly, it honors his ideals," said Switzer. "We are better off individually and as a nation when we judge people by the content of their character and not by the color of their skin, a lesson that permeated King's values."

growing FULBRIGHES

Two more Manchester scholars to teach abroad as Fulbrights ne is a free spirit with glorious voice, a student of martial arts whose passion for environmental service runs as deep as his certainty that his calling is to teach history to high school students.

The other methodically approaches his future with service fulfilled in another language, jamming a full school year and three January sessions abroad into his four-year, highest-honors bachelor's degree.

Two more Manchester College graduates join the elite roster of Fulbright scholarship recipients: Andrew F. Haff '08, a history major from Westminster, Md.; and Timothy R. Polakowski '08, a social work and Spanish major from Rockton, Ill.

Their scholarship brings to 25 the number of Fulbrights from Manchester College – more per capita than any other Indiana university or college. The Fulbright is the U.S. government's flagship program in international educational exchange.

Polakowski will teach English in South Korea; Haff will teach English in Vietnam.

Polakowski already is an experienced teacher and coach of English as a second language for Spanishspeakers, with considerable volunteer service in the North Manchester area as well as a semester with a clinic in a Chicago neighborhood. He is so fluent in Spanish that he authored a 105-page guide to local resources for area Spanish speakers.

After his Fulbright, he plans to complete graduate study toward certification for clinical practice to work with immigrant populations. He expects Korea will better prepare him for social work in the Chicago area, home to more than 50,000 Koreans.

Polakowski is comfortable living abroad. At Manchester College, he studied 10 months in Spain, and three January sessions in Mexico, Nicaragua and Europe. When not teaching, he aims to study Korean social welfare and the universal health care system of the country ... and become fluent in the language.

Haff will teach English at the college level in Vietnam in a new Fulbright program. He'll have no problem projecting his voice, or communicating – the bass vocalist began his college career in musical theatre and has impressed Manchester College audiences as a member of the A Cappella Choir, as the lead in Sound of Music and in recitals.

He has traveled to Europe with MC classes and with the United States Youth Ensembles. "The Fulbright will ... let me help others understand my language and culture," said Haff.

Undoubtedly, he also will seek opportunity to fulfill his commitments as an environmentalist. After his Fulbright experience, Haff anticipates pursuing a master's in education to prepare for teaching high school students ... and continue in volunteer service for the environment and wildlife. "My experiences at Manchester have nurtured my independence and deepened my desire to help others."

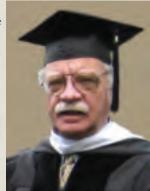

While in Vietnam, Haff hopes to investigate its martial arts, captivated by the opportunity to learn new styles to "discipline my mind and body."

Faces of manchester alumni

TWO ALUMNI OF GREAT ABILITY AND CONVICTION

One pulled a life-changing venture from near death. The other is a theologian, scholar and author with a lifetime of international Church of the Brethren service and leadership. Both now have Doctor of Humane Letters honorary degrees from Manchester College.

Loren Finnell '64 of Larchmont, N.Y., took advantage of the recent birth of the Peace Corps upon graduation from the College to do service in Ecuador. At commencement on May 18, Finnell urged the Class of 2008 to take some chances, too: "Be committed and do not be afraid to break new ground. Most of all, be kind, considerate and understanding of your fellow human beings, and of the earth that God has given us."

Finnell has focused on building organizations to address economic development. He co-founded the international Private Agencies Collaborating Together and has served as consultant to non-profit agencies in the United States, Canada and the Third World. In 2006, Finnell received the Sargent Shriver Award for Distinguished Humanitarian Service from the National Peace Corps Association.

The Resource Foundation was "borderline failure" for the first eight years, "and there were many days when quitting would have been the easy way out and nobody would have blamed me," Finnell told graduates of the philanthropic network he and his wife, Pilar, founded. Today, the healthy New York City-based foundation annually helps more than five million individuals in 23 Latin American countries with more than $10 million in grants for sustainable development.

"I have always considered Manchester my college even though I have no degree here," said Donald E. Miller '51x of Richmond, Ind., who transferred to a master's program at the University of Chicago after two years at MC. He also holds a master's degree from Bethany Theological Seminary in Richmond, where he taught for 25 years, and a Ph.D. from Harvard University.

The prolific scholar has written or co-authored a dozen books, including Story and Context: An Introduction to Christian Education and The Gospel and Mother Goose. Dr. Miller has held lectureships at 11 institutions, including the Theological School of Northern Nigeria and Princeton Theological Seminary. An ordained minister, he has served the Church of the Brethren in numerous ways, including as general secretary (chief executive officer).

Miller, a member of the Board of Trustees for 10 years, told the graduates, "The combination of creative ability and compassionate courage will serve in these times to enrich human life – yours and others."

HANDS of the SERVANT

Baccalaureate Service, May 18, 2008 Reflections of Remembrance and Gratitude Benjamin R. Martin '08

> Thank You. Thank You. This past week, I have found myself saying thank you an awful lot. Thank you for supper, thank you for the gift, thank you for coming, thank you for your patience all these years, thank you for investing a part of yourself in me. We say thank you with cards, with gifts, with voices, WITH OUR HANDS. Our hands—one of the most profound instruments that connect us to the world through which we move. Look at your hands, I mean really look. What stories do the calluses, scars, lines, scrapes, and fingernails tell?

At the base of my fingers is a neat row of toughened circles—calluses developed from moving thousands of chairs, hundreds of tables, and dozens of desks. These hands bear the stories not only of academia, but of manual work as well. These calluses were hardened through several years of labor where I had the blessing to spend time with a man who ministered to an entire campus through his hands: Dave Friermood, the guy in the white truck with a big wave, bigger smile and enormous heart, the guy whose teacher never taught him what "no" meant. Dave has some of the toughest hands I have ever seen. His nicks, scrapes, and calluses came over the course of more than 40 years of cleaning up our messes, and setting up our meetings, concerts, plays and athletic events.

Through his hands, Dave taught me what it meant to be a servant. "Can we help ya?" was always passing over his lips, followed by a flurry of activity from driving students with crutches across campus to grabbing a snow shovel and turning himself into a one-man snowplow. Many mornings I would come into work at 6:01 a.m., alright 6:10, alright 6:30. No matter how late I stumbled in, Dave always had a handshake and a pat on the back ready. It was never about him. "You good men take care of yourselves first" was his standard response to every tardy, legitimate and otherwise. If we could come in later that day to make up for lost time, his reply was always a hearty "Oh, Thank You, Thank You, Thank You."

Dave has another set of calluses on his hands; these tell a different story. One wouldn't think it, but Dave can make the oldest, most decrepit piano sound like the main stage at a revival. It doesn't happen very often, but sometimes, early in the morning, we would get to hear a verse of old hymns like "Old Rugged Cross" or "It Is Well." Twice we saw hands that usually lug trash, push a broom, and haul furniture, dance over the keys with the eloquence of artistry. The hands of the servant, in time with the heart of the master ...

Look at your hands, I mean really look. In front of you are two of the most powerful instruments you will ever possess. In front of you is the power to comfort, to create, to wound, to heal, to CHANGE. Through Dave I saw the power of hands. Through Dave I saw the hands of a servant. I saw the hands I want to have: hard, scraped, worn, but containing enough spirit to mold a young man. In the program, this is supposed to be "reflections of gratitude." So thank you to the man who has lived through his hands. Thank you to the friend who strives to create good men.

Thank you Dave.

GRADUATION SPEAKERS URGE: WELCOME OTHERS, WELCOME CHANGE

Welcome strangers as a way of life, approach the future with an open mind for change, apply your learning ... and heartfelt "Thanks!" were the messages of Graduation Day 2008 at Manchester College.

The College awarded a master's of accountancy, 153 bachelor of science degrees, 37 bachelor of arts degrees, two associates degrees and two honorary degrees on a cool, breezy afternoon. (See Page 13 for honorary degree recipients.)

"Through Manchester, I have been given the space to ponder, to question, to grow into an adult," said Sarah R. Hall '08 of Roaring Spring, Pa., who received a bachelor of arts degree cum laude in peace studies.

President Jo Young Switzer urged the graduating students to open their hearts and minds, just as the College community did to them when they arrived on campus four years ago. She recalled Paul and Mary Grandstaff of North Manchester, who invited Manchester College students into their home for Sunday dinner for more than 40 years.

GRADUATION 2008 Story and video at www.manchester.edu

"... high expectations in an environment combining liberal arts and professional preparation equip graduates to live healthy, productive, and principled lives"

from Manchester College Values Statement

Manchester College's extraordinary faculty strides far beyond the classroom. They dig into research with their students, present at professional seminars and conventions nationwide and sometimes worldwide, chair myriad committees (and academic departments), recruit new students, serve as advisors to an extraordinary number of students, and, constantly, step up to exciting new opportunities for the College.

In May, amid much cheering and standing applause from colleagues, the Dean's Award for Excellence recognized and rewarded (with $1,000 checks) 10 faculty members who went above and beyond the call of duty during the 2007-2008 school year. Here's why:

Ejenobo (Jena) Oke '97 instructor of art

After only two years on the faculty, Jena Oke already has served on a number of search committees, the Art Committee that prepares gallery shows, and the First-Year Colloquium committee. She has cultivated many student relationships, presented in residence halls and even cooked for the International Fair and dinners. She has organized a community art fair, participated in a service learning project and presented for Discussion Day. Students have high praise for her talents and compassion. Her artistry already abounds around campus.

Mark Huntington '76 professor of exercise and sport sciences

Dr. Huntington is advisor to more than 40 students, receives glowing teaching evaluations, and provides great service to the college and the community. He sits on the Graduate Council, Faculty Development Committee and is a leader on the Manchester Symphony Society board, a player in the Symphony and gave a clarinet recital. He has proposed and is working on potential additions to the College's offerings in athletic training.

ING THE example

Russell Coulter-Kern associate professor of psychology

Dr. Coulter-Kern has taught nearly 300 students over the past two years, receiving rave reviews from students for his hard work and willingness to challenge them in the classroom and shared research. He prepared four scholarly presentations, two manuscripts, an article accepted in the Journal of Educational Research, and was an Indiana Campus Compact Faculty Fellow. He served on the Retention Committee and chaired the Institutional Review Board.

Jerry E. Sweeten '75 associate professor of biology director, environmental studies

Despite a class schedule with more than 150 students and 30 advisees, Dr. Sweeten consistently receives incredible reviews. He is a leader in student-faculty research, mentoring an extraordinary number of students for presentations at the Student Research Symposium and area and national meetings on ecology. He is a leader in recruiting students and attracting grants.

Jonathan P. Watson

associate professor of English chair, Department of English

Dr. Watson participated in the very select Bread Loaf Writer's Conference at Middlebury College and his poem "To Winchelsea" was published by Orchard Review. His teaching evaluations in a variety of courses are exceedingly high. Writes a student: "Professor Watson opened doors in my mind long closed." He led an English Department with two new members into a major change for first-year students in writing.

Timothy A. Ogden '87 professor of business chair, Department of Accounting and Business

Professor Ogden led two faculty searches and served in leadership of key faculty and the General Education committees. His advising and teaching load are tremendously heavy, with 57 advisees and more than 200 students in his classes this year, with stellar evaluations from his students. "He works extraordinarily hard with admissions and yet with all he does, his campus presence is legendary," notes Glenn Sharfman, vice president and dean for academic affairs.

Josh Dzurick

instructor of exercise and sport sciences women's basketball coach

Coach Dzurick has guided his team to three consecutive Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference championships. The excellent recruiter brings not just stellar numbers of potential student-athletes to campus, he brings high-quality students. He serves as a wonderful mentor for his players on and off the court.

Stacy Stetzel instructor of education

Stetzel organized and planned a campus Science Fair for elementary students and their teachers, co-led the Student Education Association and Celebrate Teaching Day, and participated in the College's successful Council of Independent Colleges grant for 21st century teachers. She is expanding her expertise to teach a new class designed to get teachers excited about using science in their classrooms.

Susan J. Klein associate professor of chemistry chair, Department of Chemistry

associate professor of mathematics chair, Department of Mathematics and Computer Science

Dr. Brumbaugh-Smith chaired a department, led a faculty search, served on the General Education subcommittee and has undertaken a review of the mathematics curriculum. He helped coordinate the Putnam team for one of the toughest math competitions in the country and the annual math competition for Wabash County students.

Dr. Klein advises an extraordinary number of students: 54. "Dr. Klein's teaching style is totally amazing," says one of many students who praise her courses in science and general education. In addition to program and department chair duties, she advises the campus chapter of American Chemical Society, served on assessment and program committees and leads study abroad.

MC bids

to dedicated faculty

- Jim Adams(art) put Manchester College on the map of national excellence as 2002 U.S. Professor of the Year.
- Ingrid Rogers (modern languages) established Manchester as the source among area Hispanics for tutoring in English, resources guides and translators even though she is German to the bone.
- Chuck Stanton (mathematics/computer science) brought a whole new language to scores of MC grads while balancing a mathematics curriculum.
- Scott Strode (communication studies/theatre) led 524 children's theatre productions to more than 151,000 youngsters in Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Arizona ... and one in Kosovo.
- Lana Groombridge (exercise/sport sciences) introduced the concept and practice of life fitness to the North Manchester community and to communities nationwide via future teachers.

What do these five superb Manchester College faculty members have in common?

They all have retired, with emeritus status. Together, they have given 155 years of service to the College and to graduating persons of great ability and conviction, well-preparing them for careers and avocations in the arts, health and physical fitness, language, computer science and communicating.

"We tell our students that our greatest desire is that they become life-long learners because we do not know how the world will be changing, what specific skills they will need, and that they will be required to learn and work independently," said Glenn Sharfman, vice president and dean for academic affairs. "These teachers are quintessential models. They all teach different classes now than they did when they arrived – both in the courses themselves and in how they teach them."

"Ingrid learned Spanish, Chuck learned computers, Lana developed wellness, Scott taught communication studies, and Jim taught camera techniques, just to provide a few examples. The best way we define ourselves is by the excellence in our faculty and our faculty are best defined by those who lead by example."

Congress honored Jim Adams as the 2002 U.S. Professor of the Year among baccalaureate colleges. He taught at Manchester for 51 years, sharing his passions as mentor, artist, archaeologist, world traveler, filmmaker, author, photographer, linguist and more. His students gained side-by-side experience restoring historical murals and a ceiling in Huntington, Ind., saving thousands of dollars in consultation and restoration fees. Adams also taught in the English, Spanish and music departments. He reads eight languages and led student study excursions to Spain, Italy, Guatemala, northern Africa, Peru and other countries.

Professor Ingrid Rogers kept Manchester's German program alive during 20 years of dwindling high school enrollments in her native language. Then, she re-tooled to teach introductory courses in Spanish, leading language immersion classes to Mexico and Costa Rica. Ingrid and student Tim Polakowski '08 worked side-by-side to create a resource manual for area Spanish speakers, and she coordinated student volunteer English tutors in the Hispanic community. Her teachings helped the College send nearly half of its 25 Fulbrights to German-speaking countries. Her scholarship includes seven books and plays on peace and social justice.

Chuck Stanton, associate professor of mathematics and computer science, taught a breadth of classes with aplomb, especially determined to help students measure up to college-level algebra. He chaired his department for the past five years, chaired the Religious Life Committee and was an active and integral cog in the campus Technology Committee. He joined the faculty in 1992, and split his teachings between the two disciplines, teaching computer programming, computer languages, software development, calculus, geometry and algebra at all levels.

Professor Scott Strode has directed more than 70 plays for Manchester, receiving loud applause especially for Godspell, The Scarlet Letter and Fiddler on the Roof. He chaired Communication Studies for more than 20 years. He has performed professionally at the International Windsong Film Festival and in Barefoot in the Park, The Rainmaker, Annie Get Your Gun, the Indianapolis Shakespeare Festival, and many other productions. The children's theatre specialist founded The Participation Players, with MC student touring performances during January session. His intercultural theatre classes traveled to Hawaii, Japan and New Zealand.

Lana Lawver '66 Groombridge, chair of the Department of Exercise and Sport Sciences, has spent 32 years preparing future teachers, collaborating with them in research and writing long before it was in vogue. She initiated the campus 65 Alive Strength and Fitness program for local older adults and has inspired many an exercise science major to minor in gerontology. Audiences across the country and abroad have witnessed her presentations, and her leadership has extended to the state Department of Education and to the Indiana Association of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, which has honored her.

THINGS YOU ABSOLUTELY MUST DO AT MANCHESTER COLLEGE

year or so ago, as they approached graduation, Miranda Ford '07 and Ashley Libben '07 realized they were swiftly running out of time to do some things they had always wanted to during their time at Manchester College. "Sort of a last hurrah at MC," said Ashley. "They're just simple things, like eat a tenderloin at Mr. Dave's ... play the chimes, visit the observatory at night ..."

Word spread of their "spring fling," prompting alumni young and old to ponder: What should you absolutely must experience at Manchester? Some "must do" classes, events and shenanigans remain only in the archives and memories today. Yet many have endured, from the scarily tough yet brilliant teacher to Camp Mack Day, trike races and the post-midnight cramming. Some traditions transformed: that pretty May Pole dance today is down-and-dirty mud volleyball, for example.

This list includes only 101 entries, in absolutely no particular order. You surely have scores to add. Hopefully, they will take you down Kenapocomoco Lane.

Don't miss Camp Mack Day; try to out-canoe Professor Ken Brown.

NUDGE PROFESSORS OFF TRACK SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO DISCUSS THE READING YOU DIDN'T DO.

Make and ride a Homecoming Parade float through downtown. Concentrate while studying with your sweetheart in the library.

Douse those engaged bachelors in the fountain.

(Ladies were "tubbed"in cold water.)

Sneak the embalmed cat out of anatomy class to horrify your roomates.

Decorate your dorm door for Christmas.

Heed Professor Emerson "Doc" Niswander, when he says, "WHY NOT?"

Net birds at Koinonia with Jerry Sweeten '75 associate professor of biology.

Attend a 7:30 a.m. class. ("Students complain now if they have a 9 a.m. class. I cannot empathize," scoffs Carolyn Moldenhauer '61 Hardman. Make a late-night Hardee's run for hot ham-and-cheese sandwiches and milk shakes.

Play mall ball in the snow and build a snowman, fort, or whatever ...

Eat ICE CREAM for breakfast.

"Take at least one class with Professors Janina Traxler '73 and John Planer," says Sarah Kerkhoff '03 Rundell. "Better yet, take both in the same semester."

Fry your own pasta at the College Union pasta bar.

Walk to the covered bridge with someone special.

Embark on a ghost hunt. (Sadie Stutsman '16 Wampler comes to mind ...)

Run naked with your sister cross-country team members through the back roads.

Study ABROAD.

Learn the life story of the night security officer, at 1 a.m.

Practice your clarinet on the mall.

Dance ... in your room, in the halls, at the ball.

Spread a blanket, skivvy down and catch spring "rays" on the mall.

Dare to ride your bike DOWN the hill in front of the PERC.

Gather friends and sleeping bags, get a bonfire going, and spend a night behind the football field.

Toss your roommate's shoes into the tree by your dorm.

Paint your face or chest with Jimmy Butler and the Super Spartans for EVERY sporting event.

Pull finals all-nighters.

Watch a movie with your little brother or sister in Wampler Auditorium during Lil' Sibs Weekend.

Convince your professor to hold class outside on a balmy spring day, on the library steps or around one of the fountains. Listen to student AirBands during May Day Weekend, recommends Taylor Vice '07.

Roar over Professor Steve Naragon's '82 "Toaster Lecture" in Intro to Philosophy.

Write a poem or a short story for yourself rather than for a class.

Carry a couch up three flights of stairs to your dorm room.

Eat Sunday dinner at the Grandstaff's home.

Volunteer at Timbercrest or Peabody retirement communities and gain another "grandparent." It used to be a good idea to know a couple of the OAKWOOD GIRLS whose rooms had windows on the porches. If you miss the 10 p.m. curfew, they would sneak you in.

Take a second music or art class for credit.

Dig out your car from the campus lot after a blizzard, says Jill Stine Lichtsinn '79, who is still shivering from reclaiming her '65 Mustang from the Blizzard of '78.

Grin at the gall of religion Professor Bob Bowman's '56 fiery red dragon shirt for his Book of Revelations lectures in Introduction to the New Testament.

Scarf down a Dave's "world famous" tenderloin.

doing something really great, like Habitat for Humanity or helping out after a natural disaster.

"Watch Felicity with the girls on your floor," advises Alicia Osterlund '02 Redinger.

Join or participate in as many groups and activities as you can on campus.

Get a hug from frail Beate Gilliar, associate professor of English. "Get yourself fixed up with a steady beau early in the fall, so you'll have an escort for the social events at the College," was advice Paula Sheller '55 Adams received from her mother, Mary Gilbert '26 Sheller, who met her husband, H. Lynn Sheller '26 at Manchester.

Chase BATS out of the third floor of the Administration Building.

Help a little kid jump a whole grade level in reading.

Wave to long-bearded Carl Strike as he mows the lawns.

See the actual NOBEL PRIZE of Dr. Paul Flory '31, on display in the library. Attend Manchester Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Go to the Garver Hall HALLOWE EN DANCE. Chill out and catch the conversation in the Peace Studies lounge between classes.

Babysit a prof's kid.

Compare civilizations in Spain, Italy or Ireland with Mark Angelos, associate professor of history.

Try to figure out whether music Professor John Planer was serious or joking.

Learn joy for color Post-Its and paperclips from communication studies Professor Marcia Benjamin '78.

Meet the candidates at the January PRESIDENTIAL CAUCUSES in Iowa with political science Professor Leonard Williams. Share Sunday morning breakfast in the College Union with neighbors in the community.

Lose those stubborn "Freshman 15" pounds after months of late-night trips to The Oaks for milkshakes and fries.

"Take canoeing class with Tom Jarman," says Kelli Griewank '08 Grogg. "Falling out of the canoe is optional."

Swim in the gravel pit south of town, just off Indiana 13.

Take a class somewhere warm during Jan Term.

Look at the stars from the soccer field. It's really dark out there.

Climb a tree, there's hundreds to chose among and some even make great study nooks.

Successfully spike the volleyball during an intramural game.

"Make friends," advises Perry Bolton-Sell '93. "These are your friends for life, not your high school friends." Breakfast with coffee and freshbaked doughnuts at Mr. Donut after early class.

Scavenge a sofa and settle in for Rhiney Bowl softball next to Schwalm Hall.

Cook out in the East/Garver "U" on Sunday evenings. Try to dance to Meatloaf's Paradise by the Dashboard Lights, played at every dance even in the early '90s," says Stacey Stumpf '93.

Search The Oak Leaves for photos of you and friends.

Stand on top of one of the buildings to survey campus.

Yell "Man in the hall!" when escorting a male visitor to your room to warn the other women on the hall.

Sleep in a CARDBOARD

BOX on the mall during Hunger and Homelessness Week.

Participate in a demonstration or rally on the mall.

Get an old-fashioned soda downtown.

Get icicles in your hair while walking back to campus after a wintertime swim in the town pool. Join in an Ulfimate Frisbee game on the mall, or just watch the melee.

"Make out in one of the meditation rooms in the chapel," says Julie Garber '79. "When the rooms are occupied, a red light goes on at the outside of the door. You never want to barge in on someone 'at prayer."

Wear Bermuda shorts

to the Friday evening meal.

Take your rattiest or ugliest washcloths to school or risk having the iron in the water turning your towel dark orange by Christmas.

Listen for art Professor Jim Adams' footsteps as he comes down the hall in Winger for your class.

Join hundreds of thousands in a march on Washington, D.C.,

"Grab an air mattress or inner tube and float down the river," suggests Kathy Fry-Miller '75.

will get you if the current

"But not in flood stage; big logs for peace.

doesn't."

Find your RHYTHM: Join a drum circle.

See the stars through Morris Observatory with physics Professor Dwight Beery '59.

Act in a play or musical.

Wave to friends on the Internet via the SPARTAN CAM.

Ask Susan Kline, associate professor of chemistry, to teach you how to knit.

Cheer Spartan football.

Sign the Graduation Pledge and pin the green ribbon on your gown.

Spend a summer working on campus; it's totally different.

Go home with a friend for the weekend.

Try out a career in a January or summer internship.

Check out the chime tower.

Sit through one program in the old gymnasium without the pipes clanking, drowning out the sound, when the heat came on.

Play a practical joke

on a professor.

Introduce yourself ... to professors, workers on campus, students. Then you'll have caring friends all over campus.

SPARTAN HEADLINES

WOMEN ATHLETES WIN HCAC ALL-SPORTS TROPHY FOURTH STRAIGHT YEAR

On the wings of two conference championships and strong showings in track and field and volleyball carried Manchester women to their fourth-straight All-Sports Trophy in the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference. The women compiled 51 team points based on their team placings in conference standings to collect the trophy.

A sixth-straight tennis title (with interim coach Olivier Thouvenot) and a back-to-back HCAC basketball title (with head coach Josh Dzurick), helped Manchester women to the All-Sports title. Both teams represented Manchester College at NCAA National Tournaments.

A strong-second place conference finish by the women's track and field team in early May and third place on the volleyball court in November helped separate Manchester from Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology (49.5 points).

Manchester women had fourth-place finishes in golf, soccer and cross country, and seventh place in softball.

SENIOR CATCHER LISA HEATON MAKES ALL-CONFERENCE TEAM

Women's softball finished the season 9-21, seventh in the HCAC Conference with a 5-11 record under interim head coach Kendra Marlowe.

Senior catcher Lisa Heaton '09 joined the All-Conference Team for the fourth-straight year.

Brown Fitness Center

Geefs Up?

Strengthening, conditioning, toning, weight loss, fitness, endurance – whatever the exercise reason of students, student athletes, faculty, staff and neighbors young and old – the updated Brown Fitness Center has lots for everybody.

Members of the Board of Trustees distributed a Vision Fund* grant for the new equipment for the popular fitness center in the Physical Education and Recreation Center (PERC) named in honor of Leicester '36 and Jean Stouffer '37 Brown.

Brown Fitness Center opened in May 1998 with the PERC expansion. "The goal of the upgrade was to incorporate the needs of the student body and needs of our student athletes to remain a contender in the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference," said strength and conditioning coach Ron Planz.

The cardiovascular section has new elliptical, stationary bikes and treadmills. Three 42-inch flat-panel televisions with headphone jacks on the bikes and treadmills help break up the dreaded 30-minute sessions. The incline and flat bench stations were replaced with four multifunctioning Smith Racks, allowing users to do flat-bench, incline-bench, squat, clean, dips and pull-ups.

New, sleek cable Paramount stations allow users to do a variety of isolated lifts – chest flies, abdominal/oblique lifts, leg press, leg curls, leg extensions, lat press, bicep and tricep curls and much more.

* The Vision Fund is comprised of undesignated estate gifts.

Remember dorm life?

Exercise equipment and the importance of physical health is no new-fangled notion at Manchester College. Training benches, dumbbells, weights, mats, weight balls and Indian clubs have a long history at the College.

In 1915, for example, students enrolled in Girls Physical Culture donned bloomers and bows for workouts. That's Sadie Stutsman '16 Wampler, who taught art and expression, at the head of her class for this postcard photo.

According to the April 1915 issue of the Manchester College Bulletin, class work consisted of "Callisthenic Drills, including Free-Hand exercises and practice with Indian clubs, dumbbells, parallel and horizontal bars, swinging rings and wrestling mats." The College bought new apparatus for the gymnasium that year: "Two horses, one parallel bars, one horizontal bar, a springboard and several mats ..."

Six decades later, Rick Overfield '77 made good use of the incline benches and weights in the old Gymnasium as a health and physical education major. Apparently, sit-ups never go out of style.

New MC billboard celebrates community connections. Northbound travelers on Indiana 13 headed toward North Manchester will make no mistake: They're entering the home of Manchester College. The new billboard was erected in April. "We're proud of our place in this community, in Wabash County and in the state," said President Jo Young Switzer. The fireworks on the billboard symbolize the annual Independence Day celebration Manchester College underwrites as a gift of appreciation to the community. This year, the party begins at 8:30 p.m. on Friday, July 4 on the campus athletic grounds. (Photo by Tiffany Berkebile '10)
